ABSTRACT

Life satisfaction is essential for overall well-being and positive emotions which drives positive behavior resulting in increased prosocial behavior, improved relations, and better coping mechanisms. The study aims to understand the importance of gratitude and self-esteem in an individual's life satisfaction. Responses were collected from 101 individuals (43 males and 58 females) using the Rosenberg self-esteem questionnaire with 10 items, The Gratitude Questionnaire with 6 items and the Life Satisfaction questionnaire with 11 items were used. The result shows that increased gratitude results in improved life satisfaction whereas self-esteem has no relationship with life satisfaction. Practicing gratitude enhances life satisfaction and is not reliant on self-esteem. The study suggests that increased life satisfaction and gratitude leads to positive behavioral changes and the study also highlights the importance of life satisfaction and gratitude in motivating individuals to engage in positive behavior and regulating their own behavior to achieve goals.

Keywords: Self- esteem, gratitude and life satisfaction.

SELF-COMPASSION AND ITS ROLE IN MORAL DISENGAGEMENT

Shankari Yoganantham, Karthika Murugan

Vivekanandha College of Arts and Sciences for Women

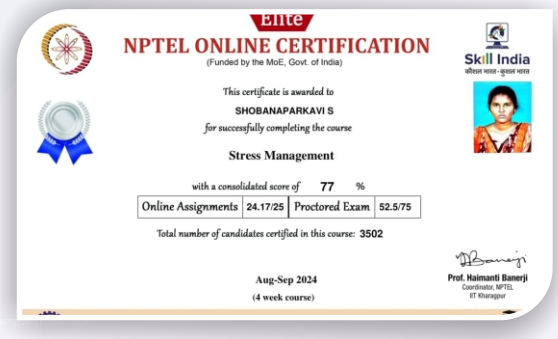

ABSTRACT

Self-compassion involves treating oneself with kindness, understanding, and non-judgment, especially during times of failure or hardship. It fosters self-awareness and promotes emotional resilience. Moral disengagement, on the other hand, refers to cognitive mechanisms that enable individuals to justify unethical behaviors without experiencing guilt; thereby diminishing accountability. This research investigates whether individuals with high self-compassion prioritize self-acceptance and understanding, potentially leading to justification of unethical actions, or whether they consciously avoid moral disengagement to uphold ethical behavior. Using the Self-Compassion Scale (12 items) and the Mechanisms of Moral Disengagement Scale (32 items), along with demographic variables, data were collected from a sample of 176 individuals. The analyses include descriptive statistics and Pearson correlation to examine the relationship between Self compassion and moral disengagement. The study explores how self-compassion influences decision-making in moral dilemmas, revealing that while high self-compassion may sometimes result in reduced moral responsibility, it can also promote self-awareness, accountability, and ethical conduct. The study's findings may provide valuable insights into the nuanced relationship between self-compassion and moral disengagement, shedding light on its role in shaping ethical behavior during challenging circumstances.

Keywords: Self-compassion, Self-awareness, Moral disengagement, emotional resilience
